

Dr. Keller's Blog

Tuesday, June 16, 2009

Today the students attended their morning classes, but the afternoon was free. The morning classes were busy, though. The Law class students went downtown to court (the only time I expect them to be in court!) and the magazine class also had a field trip. The health care class went to a hospital (the only time I expect them to go to a hospital!), and the faculty was concerned that the rest of the course may not be able to top today's experience. Students had the opportunity to hear about Samford from some in the admissions department. I allow this optional informational session since Samford gives AGS some money for operating expenses. Students also had the opportunity to visit Alabama's number one tourist attraction – the Galleria mall. The other half of the students attended the scholarship seminar led by Dr. Crockard.